

Find a Dentist

Last Updated Saturday, 24 November 2007

I have some information here about dentists all over the world who work with dental implants.

Perhaps

the most critical factor in implant dentistry is your decision as to which dentist will be in charge of your treatment.

Even

though there is a surgical portion to treatment involving dental implants, it must be remembered that this is what is called a "Restorative Dental Procedure". Therefore, it is imperative that a restorative dentist heads the implant team (If the restorative dentist also places the implants, so much the better...). If you have a Prosthodontist in your area, I would recommend that this would be your starting point. Prosthodontists are trained specialists in Restorative Dentistry and are extremely well trained in dental implant techniques. If your Prosthodontist does not actually place the implants, he or she can direct you to a qualified Oral Surgeon or Periodontist for the implant placement phase of your treatment. You can locate a Prosthodontist in your area by contacting the American College of Prosthodontists.

For

more information about choosing a dentist, Follow the links in the menus on the left side of this page and/or drop me an E-mail.

Please note that I take no responsibility for the work of any dentists listed on the site. I do not screen them in any way. They have contacted me and asked to be listed on this site. I am not responsible for any of their work or results.

S. Robert Davidoff, DMD,
FACP